Abstract
Rich, Attractive People in Attractive Places Doing Attractive Things is a fictional memoir of a dead Manhattan socialite from the 1950's named Sunny Marcus. The novel is Sunny's monologue from Hell and features many well-known figures from American pop culture including Truman Capote, Ernest Hemingway, Clark Gable, William Powell and Babe Paley. It traces the upward trajectory of Sunny's life from a modest childhood in 1920's Los Angeles to the heights of social success in the unforgiving world of Café Society to her murder.

Collecting is a way of being, a purview that explains the world around us and keeps us in touch with our collective past. Recent Posts. Attraction is such a nuanced thing: everyone both has and looks for different attractive qualities, so there's not a catch-all way to be "more" attractive. But if you're looking for random ways to up your chances of attracting someone, a new study found an easy trick. Class clowns, rejoice: having a good sense of humor can make you more attractive to other people. In a recent study by researchers at Simon Fraser University in British Columbia, Canada, around 50 men and 50 women participated in a speed-dating event. They went on between five and ten dates for four minutes each, then rated each partner for things like attractiveness and humor.
