Walker, Martin (ed.). The Iraq War: As Witnessed by the Correspondents and Slater appeared in court in New York yesterday and pleaded not guilty to charges of criminal damage and endangering life. He could face up to seven years in prison.

Ex-flight attendant Steven Slater spent the weekend relaxing on the beach. He was having a couple of beers and enjoying his new worldwide fame as the latest American folk hero. The 39-year-old was wearing a grey T-shirt, white shorts, and a baseball cap as he talked to excited fans on the beach near his home in New York. Yesterday supporters shouted, “Good for you, Steve!” and “We love you!” as he sat down on a chair, took off his shirt, and put on his sunglasses.

PHOTOCOPIABLE. In these images we see farmers and factory workers glorified and men and women working alongside each other. These propaganda posters were a departure from China’s previous ideal class, the scholar, who studied the classics and did not do manual labor. While we may know Mao’s Communist Revolution was meant to change Chinese culture, seeing a visual representation resonates further than words alone.

And through her eyes, I saw these posters from a different perspective. How progressive, how revolutionary they were at the time. Here were positive images of women working in factories, firing guns and conducting scientific experiments during a time when they were expected to be housewives and mothers.

WASHINGTON. Republican senators sent the White House a sharp message on Tuesday, warning that they were almost uniformly opposed to President Trump’s plans to impose tariffs on Mexican imports, just hours after the president said lawmakers would be “foolish” to try to stop him. Mr. Trump’s latest threat to impose 5 percent tariffs on all goods imported from Mexico, rising to as high as 25 percent until the Mexican government stems the flow of migrants, has prompted some of the most serious defiance in the Republican ranks since the president took office.
