When a cane was the necessary complement of a physician.
Abstract

Although Dr John Radcliffe's gold-headed cane, presented to the Royal College of Physicians in 1825, became well-known following the publication two years later of Dr William Macmichael's book, The gold-headed cane, little consideration has previously been given either to medical canes, or to the custom of cane-carrying by doctors in the 18th century. This article makes a brief assessment of
The pharmacist instructs the patient about: the necessity to follow the prescribed directions carefully; the dangers of overdosage; the problems resulting from an inadequate dosage; the expected side effects of the drug; the proper storage of the drug, etc. It's interesting to compare the following fact: in Ukraine the prescription is usually written out by a physician, but in Great Britain and the USA a patient can receive the prescription form a nurse, a dentist, and even from a pharmacist. The structure of a complete prescription includes six essential parts: the patient's name, the superscription, the inscription (the body of the prescription), the subscription, the signature and the prescriber's name. In continental Europe, prescriptions are written out entirely in Latin abbreviations. When using a walker, both feet should stay between the walker's back legs or wheels. With a cane or walker, try to stand upright without leaning forward or to the side. Take your time when turning and do not lift the walker off the ground while turning. Ask your doctor to watch you walk with your cane or walker to make sure you are using it correctly. Copyright © 2011 by the American Academy of Family Physicians. This content is owned by the AAFP. A person viewing it online may make one printout of the material and may use that printout only for his or her personal, non-commercial reference. This material may not otherwise be downloaded, copied, printed, stored, transmitted or reproduced in any medium, whether now known or later invented, except as authorized in writing by the AAFP. Although grammar is not directly tested on the TOEFL iBT test, the effective use of a variety of basic and complex structures will raise your scores in the speaking and writing sections. In addition, the more solid your understanding of grammatical structures, the more proficient you will be in comprehending the reading and listening passages. For the second sentence, you should write The before the word elderly because the is needed when an adjective is used as a noun. You could also correct this sentence by writing Elderly people. The following test is also downloadable by clicking the link (Grammar Diagnostic online). 1. A laser cane, which the blind find useful, sends out beams that detecting obstacles.