Boston-based photographer Bruce Peterson was reminded of this while doing, of all things, yard work. Peterson offers a number of tips for killer close-up photos. The secret of successful photography is when you play with the f-stop, shutter speed and ISO, but you must. When we get up close we lose what's in focus.
Close-up photography is thrilling. And there are tons of subjects out there, just waiting to be photographed. But if you're a beginner, I recommend you start with one particular subject: Flowers. Flowers are easy to get a hold of. They're not a super challenging subject. And you can capture some stunning close-up flower photos. Use manual focus to portray the little details. Here's your final close-up photography secret: Use manual focus. Why is this? Manual focus allows for incredible precision when focusing. And when you're shooting at high magnifications, you need to focus as precisely as possible. Here's why: In close-up photography, your depth of field is limited. Macro photography has the potential to bring us into a whole new, tiny world. Achievable using a variety of methods, macro and close-up is a fun way to get some really special and unique photographs. Here are 70 great examples: Plants and Flowers.
