New York City is home to 380 Adobe employees. In both Adobe’s Manhattan offices, the company has embraced non-traditional work environments, doing away with cubicles and ushering in open spaces. With a focus on creating small communities and promoting natural synergies between teams, both offices feature a mix of spaces where teams can work, collaborate and socialize from vinyl booths to bar stools. Estes’s subject was New York City, specifically the play of light on its myriad storefronts windows. He captured their kaleidoscopic reflections of the street with breathtaking precision, but he also trained his eye on neon signs, subway cars and department store escalators among other things. Estes’s 50-year career is the subject of Richard Estes, Painting New York City on view at the Museum of Arts and Design through September 20.
