Warning

This is not your college career center. This is the Headhunter.

And this is the first cold, brutal truth about getting a job: if you trust any person, system, piece of paper or electronic mechanism to help you find your first job out of school, you might as well go bury yourself in a post-doc while you wait for the world to change.

Because it won't. American business isn't in business to hire anyone. The sooner you learn that, the quicker you'll be on your way to becoming a profitable employee for a great company.

The second truth is this. Everything you know about job hunting is wrong, because you learned it from the wrong people: "career experts" who have no vested interest in whether this herd of new grads gets hired, because there's another herd coming around the senior slump right behind you. (Yes, there are a few exceptions, and we'll talk about those good folks in another article.)

Now for the good news. You can get coaching from someone who really knows what companies want and who can teach you how to deliver it. Who is that mysterious masked man? The Headhunter.

The Insider's Edge

Ask the Headhunter is the one place online (or offline) where you can learn the deep, dark secrets of how American business really hires people. Once you learn how all this works, you'll realize you're out in the same bright, sunny, wide-open business range that the Headhunter roams.

No matter what you've heard about the booming economy and the plethora of jobs out there, it's all meaningless if you haven't taken career matters into your own hands. No matter how high your GPA, how many campus recruiters you've met, or how many hours you've spent in the career center, the job market can crush you under a mountain of "Nos".

You need an edge, and the best place to get it is on "the inside," from the expert companies pay to solve their employment problems. That's what Ask the Headhunter is all about.

Ask the Headhunter at FoolU.com

If you're one of the thousands of new grads who's been job hunting since last year, you've found a place to lay your weary head. FoolU.com brings you Ask the Headhunter. For free. You'll soon unlearn all the bad habits you picked up at your local career center; and, you'll learn how to identify your real value and what employers really need from you.

If you're still a ways from graduation, you're going to benefit the most from Ask the Headhunter, because like a drill sergeant, I've got time to whip you into shape.

So, throw away your resume, switch on your common sense, and Ask the Headhunter. In the coming months, you'll find the best advice I - and other "insider" mentors - can offer you: a place where you can vent and raise job-related questions your career center just can't answer, find suggestions for making your future lot a better one, and, most important, follow a Foolish path that you can walk at your own pace, with your own agenda, for your own good.

Cheers,
Nick Corcodilos
The Headhunter

Nick's book, Ask The Headhunter: Reinventing The Interview to Win The Job is available through Amazon.com.

You'll also find Nick at AskTheHeadhunter.com.
Email format and list of 7 email addresses of people working at Ask The Headhunter. Contact and general information about the website asktheheadhunter.com. Sign in to uncover the email addresses for free. Ask the Headhunter book. Read 7 reviews from the world's largest community for readers. What are you doing to find your next job? Already being used by major corporations nationwide, Ask the Headhunter is a top headhunter's innovative guide to turning an interview into a hands-on meeting that showcases your expertise without gimmicks. It is the first guide to "the New Interview," a revolutionary, proactive approach to job hunting that reinvents the rules of the interview game in your favor.