The road less traveled brings us more experience, and more experience enables us to live more. The road less traveled can make all the difference. We ought not aspire to be as enlightened as a flea.

Ironically, the meaning of "Taking the road less traveled" is a misinterpretation of the poem which in the second and third stanzas describe the two roads being equally attractive. The poem therefore is reflecting on how we reconcile our decisions over time often giving more weight to the wisdom of our decisions than was true of the original circumstances. [Verse 1]
A storyline leads out new borderlines Should I move to strike what's done? Turn around Tread new ground Changing times always evolve new lines Is it true all that we're Travel as Western cultural practice is nowhere more clearly revealed than in the titles of travel books. Promising both danger and safety (the reader sets off into the unknown accompanied by a knowledgeable authority), travel book titles walk a delicate line between authenticity and caricature. How far away must we go to have crossed into the danger zone? (What exactly does it mean to say that we are going 'nowhere', as in Greater Nowheres, Miles from Nowhere, Forty Miles from Nowhere, and A Thousand Miles from Nowhere? If we go nowhere, doesn’t this mean that we've stayed home, as in 'Where did you go?'/'Nowhere', meaning 'To the fridge, the bathroom, and Wal Mart')? How do we get there? (What is the most authentic method of travelling to Nowhere – by camel, truck, motorcycle, ultralight, horse, yak, on foot?)

taught? And we’re told Then we’re sold Do you think it’s sheer luck when you catch a winning hand? Should one turn around and run one millionth time? [Pre-Chorus]

All in all we’re just one step away To take the road less travelled. [Chorus]
