I Hear My s-kíx-ze? (Mother’s) Voice Empowering Me to Relearn Nłe?kepmxcin

Anderson, Aiona

Date: 2016

Abstract:
For the purpose of this paper, Aiona, of Nłe?kepmx ancestry, will share her spílaxən̓ (personal story). Her spílaxən̓ consists of a journey of self-reflection and sharing her spílaxən̓ as she learns to tell her late mother’s spťé?k̓ (traditional teaching story) of s-kelúle? (owl) in Nłe?kepmxcin, her first language. The spťé?k̓ (story) is a recorded version from 1979. Learning the spťé?k̓ from a recording came with many challenges. Through this experience and process, the author hoped for a transformative healing experience to help overcome many childhood fears and traumas that were brutally imposed on her at residential school for speaking Nłe?kepmxcin. The author’s belief is that the learning process will facilitate the unblocking of old memories and fears that have for years prevented her success in past efforts to speak Nłe?kepmxcin. Through her journey, she was moved to reconnect more strongly with ancestors by practicing the smudging prayer and cleansing ceremony. This seemed to mitigate many of the fears that had been triggered through remembering her language interruption in residential school. She also discovered that in a daily routine of ceremonial prayer and painting, she found safe places to continue her spílaxən̓-m. During months of an agonizing but liberating journey of writing, painting, crying, laughing, sleep deprivation, recurrence of health issues, new insights, and reconnection with Nłe?kepmx identity, family, community, and culture, the author has written an emotionally intimate and courageous spílaxən̓. The journey is not over but the beginning of language revitalization for the author.

This mother had been deaf since she was 30 years old with a rare problem, so hearing aids were no help for her. Now doctors could cure her, but she... So maybe I'm afraid of what I will hear compared to what my brain tells me that I hear. Just yesterday, she was able to hear her 8-year-old son's voice for the very first time, and we were there to capture it. Don's activation went fantastic. She's gonna leave here soon and go meet her son, and hear his voice for the first time. I still haven't spoken to my youngest son and so I'm really excited to hearing him. She never heard my voice. I'm just really excited that you can finally hear. I'm nervous and hopeful, but I'm also afraid. Hey guys I'm wondering what relearn moves does exactly. does someone have a clue about this? Is it for you to insert the moves for the pokémon to learn via move tutor? Or related to moves you relearn via level up? I have a few pkmn I created at lv 50 and when I go to the move tutor he says that th You say you can hear your mother's voice recorded in your mind and only reproducing it, he or she can be laughed off. Your auditory nerves are still functioning in good condition, no can d
