The West: An Illustrated History For Children

Dayton Duncan

As the northeast became urbanized and industrialized, and was at the forefront of developing roads, tracks (using packhorses were widened to allow wheeled vehicles around 1750). These roads formed corduroy roads, developed by a Scottish engineer John L. way to the West, were opened in [825] New England and the northeast region became the main source for migrants to the West: An Illustrated History of the Core.