On continuities in the cultural realm, see Michael David-Fox, “What Is Cultural Revolution?” By Frances Lee Bernstein (DeKalb: Northern Illinois University Press, 2007. 264pp.). Frances Lee Bernstein’s main argument in The Dictatorship of Sex is that the Soviet doctors who claimed to be providing “sexual enlightenment” in the years 1917–1933 chose a sexless model of sex, one which dealt almost exclusively with sexual deviancy, rather than sexual pleasure. Moreover, the doctors’ chosen focus on medical professionalization and the elimination of competing discourses ultimately contributed to the ultimate demise of their discipline.
