Did the Mob Kill JFK?

Donald E. Wilkes Jr., University of Georgia School of Law

The Athens Observer, p. 17 (December 15, 1988).

Abstract

The 25th anniversary of President John F. Kennedy’s murder has now come and gone, marked by a flurry of newspaper and magazine articles and TV and radio specials reminding us of JFK’s life and his presidency, and the tragic circumstances of his death. But the passing of the quarter-century mark has not ended the questions that linger concerning the crime of the century.

Repository Citation

https://digitalcommons.law.uga.edu/fac_pm/111

The mob probably did have a small hand in the assassination because they felt betrayed by the investigations that were going on by JFK’s younger brother and his attorney general RFK. The mob wanted to target RFK but as Marcelo said: “If you cut off the tail of the dog (killing RFK) the dog will just turn around and bite you, but if you cut off the head of the dog (killing JFK) the tail of the dog will stop barking on its own.” translation: If the mob killed RFK first than JFK would. If the MOB killed JFK it was only assisting the CIA. If the government was not involved why won’t they release Oswald’s tax returns after all these years??? there are dozens of other inconsistencies also. Source(s): L. J. Prouty, Jesse Ventura Oliver Stone www.fff.org. John and Robert Kennedy brought to their respective positions as President and Attorney General an unprecedented familiarity with the threat of organized crime -- and a commitment to prosecute its leaders -- based on their service as member and chief counsel respectively of the McClellan Committee during its extensive investigation of labor racketeering in the late 1950's. In 1963, only weeks after JFK was killed, the FBI questioned 14 Marcello mob associates. Yet Marcello's name doesn't even appear in the Warren Commission Report.