Redefining plagiarism; A friend or a foe

Tariq Hayat Khan
Consultant Anesthesiologist & Pain Specialist, KRL General Hospital, Islamabad (Pakistan)

Keywords: Plagiarism, Copyrights, Declaration of Helsinki, Berne Convention, Higher Education Commission

ABSTRACT

Plagiarism is a universal phenomenon, not strictly restricted to medical writing, but encompassing almost all fields of life. Over a period of time, it has become customary to talk very loudly about it and even condemn it as a sin. A review of the past and present scientific knowledge as well as literature confirms that plagiarism has been and is still in wide practice in developed as well as undeveloped countries. The availability of scientific knowledge on the internet has made it easier to plagiarise as well as to identify plagiarized material. On the other hand much of the research methodology, reviews, discussion parts of original articles and even larger books and monographs do contain parts of copied material from already published material. This editorial review the prevalence of and the measures to control the plagiarism, and stresses a need to draw fresh lines in between good and bad plagiarism.
Pediatric Transversus Abdominis Plane (TAP) Block
Plagiarism is a universal phenomenon, not strictly restricted to medical writing, but encompassing almost all fields of life. Over a period of time, it has become customary to talk very loudly about it and even condemn it as a sin. A review of the past and present scientific knowledge as well as literature confirms that plagiarism has been and is still in wide practice in developed as well as undeveloped countries. Citation: Khan TH. Redefining plagiarism; a friend or a foe? (Editorial). Anaesth Pain & Intensive Care 2012; 16(2): 119-122. It may be quite difficult to ascertain the first use of the word ‘plagiarism’, but the Oxford English Dictionary credits Ben Jonson with being the first to use it in print. Read the full Philosophy essay paper on «Candide and Connor: Friend or Foe». If you need an original Philosophy essay written from scratch, place your order at ExclusivePapers.com. A sidekick is a close person who becomes a friend and stays close throughout one’s life. Candide is a character in need of close company and a true friend. On the other hand, Connor is a sly person whose ambitions are shallow (K. Stout and R. Stout 79). There is a need to discuss and determine whether Candide and Connor can be sidekicks. Overview. Buy Candide and Connor: Friend or Foe essay paper online. Title of your paper. Type of assignment.