Treat it like a wild animal. Why are cats, even those that have only known humans to be kind and friendly, so standoffish? I knew they don’t have all the selective breeding of dogs. But I didn’t appreciate the scope of this difference until I talked to science writer Tom McNamee, author of The Inner Life of Cats. Allergic people and spurned cat lovers agree: It feels like cats always head toward the one person who doesn’t want their company. This makes sense, says McNamee, because all the usual moves that cat-lovers make, like walking toward the cat making kissy noises, are counter-productive. Here’s how to avoid seeming like a threat: Don’t look the cat in the eyes. And don’t come straight at it. Cats are the biggest divas on the internet, so there’s no way we’ve got all the shape-shifting felines in the world in this list. We’d love for you to submit more pictures of cats that look like other things and vote for your favorite lookalikes!
