Abstract:
The purpose of this thesis is to present a thorough discussion of the origins of St. John's College, and a narrative of its subsequent one hundred years of development, dating from its establishment by Bishop Robert Machray in 1866. The approach is generally chronological. Following a discussion of the College's origins as the outgrowth of mission schools, the Red River Academy, and Bishop Anderson's St, John's College, the emphasis of the narrative gradually shifts towards the relationship between the College and the University of Manitoba. Financial difficulties experienced over the years are pointed out and an attempt is made throughout to trace the changes in the teaching staff and in the scope of the curriculum.

Its former students include Nobel prizewinners, Prime Ministers, scientists, artists, and leaders in business and industry. Today it has more than 150 "Fellows" (resident academics who teach and research at St John's), about 900 students (a mix of undergraduates and postgraduates), and about 250 staff. It's an inspiring place to study, or even just to visit. Our values. For a detailed history of the College, see P. Linehan (ed.), St John's College Cambridge: a history (2011). Our values. Our history. Our students. Our students. The College has a long history of educating people from all social backgrounds and financial circumstances. St. John's College is a small Anglican college located on the University of Manitoba campus in Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada. It is home to the Institute for Anglican Ministry, a ministry of the Diocese of Rupert's Land that seeks to train lay people. The first Anglican cleric in the Northwest interior of Canada was the Reverend John West who, in 1820, established the first Anglican school in the Red River Colony. The growth of the Red River Colony led to the creation of the Diocese of Rupert's Land in
