New Challenges for Migration Policy in Central and Eastern Europe

Laczko, Frank and Stacher, I. and von Koppenfels, Amanda Klekowski, eds. (2002) New Challenges for Migration Policy in Central and Eastern Europe. Asser Press, The Hague, 275 pp. ISBN 978-90-6704-153-9. (The full text of this publication is not currently available from this repository. You may be able to access a copy if URLs are provided)

Abstract

Since the fall of the Berlin Wall the countries of Central and Eastern Europe have had to deal with a completely new set of legislative and policy challenges relating to migration. This book reviews current and expected migration trends in Central and Eastern Europe, including trends in labour migration, transit migration, trafficking and migrant smuggling. It considers how EU enlargement eastwards is likely to affect international migration in Europe. It also examines how much progress the Central and Eastern European countries have made in aligning their migration legislation and migration policies with EU practice. The book concludes that virtually all the candidate countries appear to be on track as far as legislative developments are concerned, but few countries have seriously and systematically examined the question of what kind of migration policy they wish to develop in the future.

Item Type: Edited book

Subjects: J Political Science > JV Colonies and colonization. Emigration and immigration. International migration

Divisions: Faculties > Social Sciences > School of Social Policy Sociology and Social Research > Migration and Social Care (RAE)

Depositing User: Amanda Klekowski von Koppenfels

Date Deposited: 25 Sep 2008 22:23 UTC

Last Modified: 11 Jul 2014 12:57 UTC

Resource URI: https://kar.kent.ac.uk/id/eprint/7275 (The current URI for this page, for reference purposes)

Export to: RefWorks | EPrints3 XML | BibTeX | CSV

Depositors only (login required): Edit this record

This book reviews current and expected migration trends in Central and Eastern Europe, including trends in labour migration, transit migration, trafficking and migrant smuggling. It considers how EU enlargement eastwards is likely to affect international migration in Europe. It also examines how much progress the Central and Eastern European countries have made in aligning their migration legislation and migration policies with EU practice. The book concludes that virtually all the candidate countries appear to be on track as far as legislative developments are concerned, but few countries hav in Central and Eastern European countries (CEECs) Albert Kraler and Krystyna Iglicka; 4. EU enlargement and future east-west migration Heinz Fassmann and Rainer Münz; 5. Border apprehension statistics of Central and Eastern Europe - a source for measuring illegal migration? Peter Futo and Thomas A. Tass; 6. Irregular migration through Bosnia and Herzegovina Peter Kolakovic, Jonathan Martens and Lynellyn Long; 7. Trafficking in women from Central and Eastern Europe: a review of statistical data Frank Laczko, Amanda Klekowski von Koppenfels and Jana Barthel; 8. Candidate countries, enlargement a Immigration into Central and Eastern Europe has become mainly economically motivated, while migration out of this region is for reasons more economically, culturally and socially diverse. While migration in Western Europe has been neither new nor threatening, the transformations in Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union have posed new challenges to both East and West. At a time when EU15 was being defined and redefined as a major immigration target, Central and Eastern Europe (CEE[1]) was gradually acquiring a dual profile as a region of both emigrants and immigrants. Consequently, a “new migration space” (Wallace & Stola 2001) — first in the EU proximity and then inside the union — was being constructed.