Dromes, Phones and Graphs

Abstract
Early in September in this year of quadrennial madness, I had written to Dr. H.K. Wombat at his retreat in the Alpujarras in Spain for his prediction of the outcome of the Reagan-Mondale contest. Weeks elapsed without an answer, and I supposed that the worthy marsupial had either gone walkabout or was again engaged in the matters of international intrigue which had taken him to Spain in the first place.

DROMe is an Italian brand designed by Creative Director Marianna Rosati. Each collection is created and produced in Florence, where the headquarters are. For Marianna designing a collection doesn’t just mean comparing materials and colours, but concerns merging the dress container, the sensations conveyed in a picture, an emotion, as an overlay of multiple invisible layers that merge together to form the world that is DROMe. DROMe is an urban collection of evening and daywear, where the style is utterly sophisticated, fusing fabrics and leather with elaborated details, favouring a minimal approach. DROMe can be found worldwide in the finest stores, in the flagship store in Milan and from the online store.
